RESILIENT

SECOND HARVEST
FOOD BANK
of SANTA CLARA and
SAN MATEO COUNTIES

2013
ANNUAL REPORT
The recession is over. That’s what the analysts say, anyway, and there are definite signs of recovery here in Silicon Valley and on the Peninsula. The housing market is back on track, stock prices are rising, and some tech companies are seeing record profits. Yet the number of local families struggling to put food on the table has stayed stubbornly high.

The economic recovery has been uneven, and the cost of living in our two-county area is rising. The sad truth is that many working families make too much to qualify for government help, but too little to make ends meet in an area where apartment rents alone average more than $2,000 per month.

As was true for many of our clients, the past year at Second Harvest required us to be resilient. Even as the numbers of people needing food grew, we were determined to build a sturdier foundation to deal with continuing uncertainty.

While we worked, we hoped.

We hoped that the calls for help would slowly wane. We hoped that the pantries and soup kitchens that rely on Second Harvest for the vast majority of their food every week would report that fewer people were showing up for help.

We hoped that we would hear more about successes, and fewer stories of men, women and children who had reached the limits of their own resources and needed food from Second Harvest and our distribution partners to survive.

While we hoped for the best, we prepared for the worst.

Unfortunately our hopes were dashed when the number of people we provided food to last year actually increased by 4%. Today more than one in 10 of our neighbors receive at least some of their food from Second Harvest Food Bank. This is over and above the 50% increase in demand that we experienced at the beginning of the recession.

So we worked to optimize our new fresh produce facility. We ramped up our efforts to connect people to food from all sources. We re-engineered our supply chain to improve efficiency and maximize impact. We stepped up our game...again.
Our hearts were heavy.

We knew that more than a quarter of a million people and 330 local nonprofits were relying on us for food. Without Second Harvest, soup kitchen refrigerators, pantry shelves and far too many family dinner tables would be bare.

So we got to work.

We “rescued” food from every source we could find – from farmers, manufacturers and grocery stores. We forged new partnerships and strengthened old ones. We finalized a three-year strategic plan – focused on efficiency, technology and community leadership – to guide us as we navigate through this “new normal.”

We dramatically increased our distribution of fresh produce, and showed families how to cook healthier meals. We began piloting an “online marketplace” to directly connect sources of excess food to soup kitchens. When local shelters were forced to cut back, we dug deep to address specific food needs among the homeless. We continued to obsess about operational efficiency, so that we could plow every penny back into our mission: providing food to people in need.

With your help, we were here for the people in our community.

How did we do? In the past year, Second Harvest provided more than a million pounds of healthy food per week, a 16% increase, while reducing our cost per pound by 6%.

But we could not have done so without you. You showed up for us on so many levels. You volunteered. You donated. You did for Second Harvest Food Bank what we do for those we serve. You gave us hope and strengthened our resolve. You helped us provide something so basic, yet so necessary – healthy food – for hundreds of thousands of our neighbors.

Thank you for helping us to ensure that every person who needs a meal can get one.

Kathy Jackson
Chief Executive Officer, Second Harvest Food Bank
Board Member, California Association of Food Banks
Board Member, Feeding America

Charity Navigator has awarded Second Harvest Food Bank a 4-star rating for the 7th year in a row, putting us in the top 2% of nonprofits in the nation based on financial stability, accountability and transparency.
How Big is Local Hunger?

Our goal is to ensure that anyone who needs a meal can get one.

So we partner each year with Santa Clara University to determine how many meals are missing in our neighborhoods. Measuring this gap helps us gauge our progress as a community as well as forecast the challenges that lay ahead.

For 2012, researchers estimate that 823 million meals were required in order for all of our low income neighbors to eat three meals each day.

These families were able to afford enough food to provide 422 million meals, about half of what they actually needed, leaving a ‘gap’ of 402 million meals that needed to be provided by other sources.

That’s where Second Harvest and government programs – including school lunches and breakfasts – stepped in. Second Harvest provided more food than any other source, except for CalFresh (food stamps), to our hungry neighbors. But notwithstanding a meaningful increase in food assistance from all sources, because need also went up the number of ‘missing meals’ – mealtimes when children, families and seniors went hungry – remained staggeringly high. So how big is local hunger?

204 million ‘missing meals’ big!
Did you know that more than 50% of the food Second Harvest distributes is fresh produce?

At Second Harvest, we have employees who are dedicated to community nutrition. They give presentations on proper nutrition, provide samples of healthy foods and create recipe cards to make it easier for the families we serve to prepare the foods they receive.

Study shows Second Harvest’s Nutrition Education influences healthy eating habits

- Short nutrition education interventions, including food samples and recipe cards, were provided to hundreds of people.
- Clients who received nutrition education were more likely to report healthier eating strategies, including less reliance on fast food.
- The intervention group prepared and ate more than four times as many fruits and vegetables as the control group.
OUR NEIGHBORS: The People Behind the Numbers

Together, we feed 1 in 10 of our neighbors each month. Meet some of them.

It broke my heart to realize that I couldn’t afford a bag of grapes or something as basic as a peanut butter and jelly sandwich for my kids’ lunches. Like many families, we are caught in the middle: we make too little to make ends meet, and yet too much to qualify for public support services.

-Amanda
We found ourselves out of work and had trouble finding new jobs. We moved to a hotel for a while, but eventually ran out of money and ended up living in a tent on the beach. Eddie and I didn’t want the kids to know how bad things were so we decided to turn our situation into sort of a summer camping ‘adventure.’ Through a referral, we found Second Harvest Food Bank and were connected to nutritious meals at a local pantry. It’s such a blessing having food! Our spirit was nourished as well, which has helped us rebuild our lives.

–Love

I take pride in being self-reliant, so the very day I reached out to Second Harvest for help was also the day I signed up to be a senior hunger program volunteer. When I receive more food than I can use, I redistribute the extra to others in need. I call this the Third Harvest.

-Ardys
The Gift of Time

Our mission of feeding the hungry is fulfilled through countless numbers of everyday people like you volunteering at the Food Bank. In their every action, they nourish the spirit of families, children and seniors who no longer have to worry about where their next meal will come from. On their behalf, we thank you!

I volunteer weekly at Second Harvest and I assisted with the Hunger in America Study, which takes place every four years. To help a woman participate, I offered to hold her place in line while she left to answer the survey.

As a volunteer, I knew the types of food that were on hand that day, so I thought about what kinds of dishes I could prepare with the vegetables, fruits and canned goods. But it occurred to me that the woman whose place I held had no idea what sort of food she would be receiving. She was there simply to get food, any kind of food. This realization made a deep impression on me. I felt moved to be able to experience what it was like to be in her shoes.

-Marty

With my cane on the right side and paperwork on the left, I’m ready for all the action a food distribution may produce. I make sure to greet every member with a smile. I can see their spirits lift when they get their bags of food.

-Carolyn

Last year, volunteers gave nearly 310,000 volunteer hours valued at $6.3 million!
No act of kindness is more fundamental to our culture than sharing food with a neighbor in need. And with each and every financial gift, no matter the amount, that is what you do through your support of Second Harvest Food Bank. Each of you are making an immediate and meaningful difference in the lives of others, and we are truly grateful.

Becoming a parent changes everything, and our children have become our whole lives. We can’t imagine waking up each morning and worrying about whether or not we have enough food to feed our kids. No one deserves to be hungry, especially children. We support Second Harvest Food Bank because we believe providing nutritious food is one of the best ways to improve the lives of those in need and, while doing so, to instill the importance of giving back to our kids.

- The Scott Family
(Kevin, Shannon, Chloe and Connor)

What’s most disturbing is the number of kids that are affected by hunger. Approximately half of the people receiving food from Second Harvest Food Bank are children. The 49ers have long been committed to keeping kids safe, on track and in school. In order to fulfill this mission, it’s essential that children in our community receive the most basic need of all: food.

-Jed York
CEO, San Francisco 49ers
When my family first came to the United States as refugees in 1975 we received food stamps to help keep food on the table. I will never forget the generosity of the American people, which is why it’s so important for us to give back. We know that when we make a gift to Second Harvest Food Bank, those dollars directly support hundreds of local non-profits who rely on Second Harvest to feed the long lines of hungry people in our community. As long as we all keep giving as generously as possible, Second Harvest can remain one of the few Food Banks in the country that doesn’t charge community based organizations for the food they receive.

-Van Dang
Vice President, Law & Deputy General Counsel, Cisco Systems
Board Member, Second Harvest Food Bank

This year, our support of Second Harvest’s Family Harvest program will bring more than half a million pounds of nutritious food, including fresh fruits and vegetables, to low-income children and families. While we may not personally see the empty refrigerator or lunch box of a hungry family or child, we know that the consequences of hunger impact the lives of our neighbors and the health of our community.

-Pamela Kurtzman
Director of Grants and Programs for Sequoia Healthcare District
We are grateful for the generous donations from private foundations, corporations and individuals to promote and sustain our mission. Food and fund drives benefiting Second Harvest, are unique community efforts planned and promoted in partnership with more than two thousand groups throughout the year.

Nothing is WASTED

Working with large and small growers across California and in neighboring states, the Food Bank ‘rescues’ fresh fruits and vegetables that are perfectly edible and perfectly nutritious, just not ‘perfect’ for the grocery store shelves.

“Last year, millions of pounds of fresh produce that would otherwise have gone to waste were rescued by Second Harvest. We cover the cost of freight and packaging to make it easy on the farmers. Wasting perfectly good food when people are hungry is unacceptable.”

-Diane Tye Zapata
Senior Manager of Food Resources at Second Harvest
Produce is a nutritional gift to our hungry neighbors who are rarely able to afford fresh fruits and vegetables.

Of the 40 food banks in California, Second Harvest acquired more produce than any other food bank – enough to fill 700 48-foot trailers in the past year alone.
What most people wouldn’t guess from meeting me is that I rely on CalFresh. I’m able to purchase nutritious staples at the grocery store that give me and my daughter the “fuel” we need to learn and thrive. Through careful planning, we have enough food every month to stay healthy. Without food stamps, I wouldn’t be able to stay in school and work toward a better future for myself and my daughter.

After completing all of the requirements for my nutrition degree, I plan to become a registered dietitian and continue working as a community educator. It’s the work that I fell in love with while volunteering at Second Harvest. The work that is done at the Food Bank is so helpful—the food that’s provided, the education that’s given. There’s a lot of caring going on there.

-Amber
When people need food, the first thing they do is call our Food Connection hotline.

Each call is free and confidential. Our dedicated employees tell callers where they can get free food at locations close to where they live or work. Callers also find out if they qualify for CalFresh.

Last year, Second Harvest provided 42,650 referrals, 10% more than the previous year. That’s an average of more than 3,500 food assistance referrals each month.
A Gift to Us is a Gift to Them

Second Harvest provides most of the food to more than 330 community-based organizations at 770 sites throughout both counties.

One full year after adding a third facility, we have not only improved our efficiency, we have provided more food to hungry people. I’m proud to report that without sacrificing nutritional quality, we significantly increased the overall amount of food distributed while simultaneously reducing the cost required to handle each pound of food.

–Sally Petersen
CFO, Second Harvest Food Bank

We see Second Harvest Food Bank striving for constant improvement by employing systems, controls and technology that ensure best practices.
